

Two men, totally blind, found their way to our Prince St. store in search of clothing—black frock suits.

They were fitted with all the care and attention we give every one.

"I've been told," said one in the course of conversation, "that I can rely on everything you tell me—my reason for coming here."

Doesn't "your money back if you want it" say so?

Stores close at six o'clock.

STATE CHARITIES AID.

The Association Asks for an Endowment Fund and Contributions for Expenses.

The State Charities Aid Association, in its twenty-third annual report, says that the most important event in the year in connection with public charitable institutions in this city is the separation of the Charity and the Correction departments. The report claims the credit for this for the association. It says:

"The absolute separation of the almshouse, hospitals, and asylms of the city from the institutions designed for the reformation and punishment of criminals was necessarily the first step in righting the grievous wrongs from which the unfortunate thousands of recipients of the charity have suffered so many years. The division of the work of the Charities and Correction and the placing of each branch under an independent administrative authority, while it had flourished so long in this ownership and administration, and made possible their correction."

A report claims for the association the credit also of the cumulative sentence system in force at the workhouse, which was attacked by the City Magistrates because it interfered with the work of the association. The report says that the system is a great improvement on the old one.

In the standing the work of the association for the benefit of the poor during the year the report closes with an appeal for funds. An effort is being made to raise an endowment fund of $100,000. An annual income of $10,000 is needed to pay the expenses of the association, and annual subscriptions of from $5 to $100 are asked. The amount will be sent to Charles S. Fairchild or to the association rooms in the United Charities building.

ROUNDSMEN EXAMINED.

One Candidate for Sergeant Major to Have His Gold Pen to Write His Answers.

Civil Service Examiner W. B. Dobbs superintended yesterday the examination for promotion of over one hundred roundsmen in room 171 of the Federal building. Sixty of the applicants had received from the Police Board certificates showing a percentage of 40 or more for efficiency, rank, and good service.

Among those who sat at the little desks in the examination room writing and figuring for an advance in official rank were Stephen O'Brien, at present in charge of the Detective Bureau; George McClusky, one of the lieutenants of ex-Chief Binches, and George Walling, son of the late George Washington Walling, who is New York's Superintendent of Police for many years.

Police Commissioner Grant presided over the examination and Inspector Corrigan attended to see that the unimportant overalls of the men did not interfere with the examination.

The list of subjects consisted of penmanship, spelling, letter writing, arithmetic, rules and regulations of the Police Department, and the Civil Law and City ordinances. The examination began at about a quarter to 11 o'clock, with the giving out of a list of twenty words for dictation.

Among the incidents of the examination, which was concluded in the afternoon, was Roundman Clark's inability to dilute the answer to a question concerning the man who was sent to his home, soon returned with the essential article, after which the roundman wrote his answers with neatness and despatch.
